

Nabila Kazmi is pursuing her doctorate from the University of Victoria, Canada. Her PhD is looking at safe and inclusive spaces for young women from urban slums in India and their placemaking practices.

Her research interests include gender justice, feminist theories, intersectional social justice, art and storytelling for social justice and adult education. Nabila is part of an international feminist research network through her research work that has exposed her to various research opportunities like book editing, curating exhibitions, virtual exhibitions, and video creation.

Prior to her doctorate, Nabila has worked as within the non-profit sector in India in education in different capacities as a teacher and a project coordinator.